

Restaurant review : El Patio

Meaty offer

▲ El Patio, considered a temple to top quality gastronomy has once again opened its doors to the general public.

For a while, only groups could book at this wonderful eatery with the stunning Andalusian patio that gives it its name, but it has now opened again as a restaurant offering Iberian style cuisine, with a particularly fine meat offer which is accompanied by a bodega of over 100 wines, live piano music and exquisite service.

If you love meat, it's got to be El Patio. Among the specialities on offer are a variety of cuts of baby lamb, char-grilled poussin, pork entrecôte, fillet steaks of wild boar and steak tartar.

To accompany them there is a wide range of salads, cheeses, garnishes, sauces and mojos as well as some delicious desserts for a happy ending to a well

Cool cava

▲ Forget what your mother used to say, you are allowed to drink straight from the bottle, or at least from these specially designed Miniblack bottles from top cava producer Freixenet. Ideal for the glamorous ambience of our coolest night spots and restaurants or as a take out singular celebration, once uncorked the chic, built-in glass is screwed on to the top of the bottle and you're ready to sip. Fine and intense on the nose with fruit overtones, this first-class cava, the Spanish version of champagne just as good but more reasonably priced, is a must for the upcoming celebratory season. Once tried it's sure to become an all year round favourite.
